This course will give an overview of several fields of competences of the European Union. It will aim at offering a better comprehension of the concrete actions carried out by the EU. After describing the political finality and the specificity of the original community project, it will analyze the different scope of competencies of the EU, illustrating the hybrid nature of the EU, as a mix of supranational and intergovernmental organization. The selected topics will highlight the three different types of competences of the EU (exclusive/shared/supporting competences): internal market; economic and monetary union; agriculture; energy; education. By covering economic as well as political tasks of the EU, the course will reexamine the role and the results of the method of European integration commonly known as "spillover effect" or "functionalism". Emphasis will be put on current developments. Critical discussion will be encouraged.
